

Where to Find Your Appliance Serial Numbers

Serial numbers are required for warranty claims, repairs, and to claim rebates. Every appliance has a serial number supplied by the manufacturer. The serial number is located on a label that is typically affixed to the interior of the appliance where it will be protected from damage. The most common location is just inside the door. The serial number is also noted on each appliance's packaging.

See below for example serial number labels from various types of products. Serial number labels contain the serial number (L) and usually also the model number (E).

Serial number labels are meant to be permanent and made from materials that will last the lifetime of the appliance. Do not remove the serial number labels from your appliances for any reason -- this will prevent you from obtaining warranty service or claiming rebates. A product that has had serial number labels defaced or removed is not returnable under any circumstances.

Sometimes serial number labels are difficult to find or hidden. This guide will outline common locations for serial number labels on most brands of appliances.

Refrigerators

Serial number labels on refrigerators are usually located in the interior, in the upper right or upper left front corner. Check inside just behind the doors.

Dishwashers

Dishwasher serial number labels are inside the door, either on the left or right edge of the interior portion of the door.

Front Load Washers

Serial number labels for front load washing machines are typically located inside the door on the door frame.

Top Load Washers

Serial number labels for top load washing machines are typically located underneath the lid, either on the rear portion of the lid or on the lid frame. Samsung models and some others instead have the label on the rear of the appliance, and you may have to move it away from the wall or tilt it to read the label. Do not tilt a washing machine that is loaded or full of water.

Dryers

Top load dryer serial number labels are typically inside the door, either on the door itself or on the door frame. Some Samsung models instead have the serial number label on the rear of the appliance.
